Synopsis

"If you are a fan of tv's Miss Fisher's Murder Mysteries you will like these books." "Totally enjoyable reading. I love this series." "A great British who done it." A poltergeist guilty of murder? Ginger Gold receives a letter from her sister-in-law, Felicia, requesting Ginger come straightaway to her late husband's family home, Bray Manor. Dowager Lady Gold, Ginger's nervous grandmother through marriage, believes the old manor is haunted. Ginger doesn't believe in ghosts, but is haunted nevertheless by memories of her husband and the lure of his gravesite she just can't bring herself to visit. In order to keep Bray Manor afloat financially, Felicia and Ambrosia have opened the estate to the public for club meetings and special events. Knitters, stamp collectors and gardeners converge weekly--targets for the poltergeist that seems to find amusement in hiding small things from their owners. Bray Manor hosts a dance to raise money for maimed soldiers who struggle with peacetime after the Great War. Felicia invites her flapper friends and her new beau, Captain Smithwick, a man Ginger has met before and definitely doesn't like. When the dance ends with the discovery of a body, Ambrosia is certain the poltergeist is to blame, but Ginger is quite sure the murderer is made of flesh and blood.

Customer Reviews

I really love this series very much. It is well written. I love the characters and the plot is good. I am anxious to read the next book.

Read the whole series and lived them all. This book brings the whole story of Gingers family full circle for the time being . Can't wait til October!

Ginger is just too cute and the plots have just enough twists to make a good story.

A wonderful series looking forward to the next book
