Customer Reviews

Edith and Daniel have some growing lessons to accomplish before his father will agree to them marrying. This story us about their love, their growth, and how they helped each other. A good story with a good lesson.

This is a great story about two young people who need to work on different personality traits and help each other improve and fall in love with each other.

It was a very good book- fast reading- but also very thought provoking- it gave me a challenge to strive to be more Christ like Amish Romance : Amish Pride by Sarah Miller This is a story about two different people and what they are going though in their life and it takes some hard words that they really can't understand why people feel the way they do when they feel like they are doing just being them self an nothing wrong. This is a very good story for everyone to read and to take heart about what the true meaning is all about. So please get this book and really read an let it mingle around in your head and heart. When you have finished send a message to the author an then come back on or were ever you like to write a review and leave on for others to see that you also enjoyed this book an getting a mess the author also are very happy.

A beautiful girl with a character trait and a young man with a different character trait, both of which need work and which match character traits this octogenarian is still working on. Such a delight that I read aloud over half of it to my daughter while she worked in the kitchen. Anyone with either of these traits that need work will, by reading this book, receive valuable counseling delivered in the most painless format. I expect to reread portions of this book whenever I again become aware that one (or both) of those character traits need work.

The Bishop is a amazing man. The way he helped Edith and Daniel is wonderful. The community is truly remarkable how they work together.

The book was very well written with a little suspense. It explained how being prideful is unacceptable. It was hard to put the book down.

Nobody is perfect but if you keep trusting in God He will lead on the right road .He will change you for the good.
