Ambassador Morgenthau's Story

Synopsis

These are memoirs of the American ambassador to Constantinople between 1913 and 1916. They were written in 1918. Morgenthau was an astute observer who had good contacts with the leaders of Ottoman Turkey, as well as their allies. His memoirs cover WWI in the Middle East, including the Turco-German alliance, the Allied Gallipoli campaign and the genocide of Armenians. This critical edition of Morgenthau's work includes a critical introduction by Ara Sarafian with reference to Morgenthau's private papers.

Henry Morgenthau was born Mannheim (Germany). He graduated from Columbia Law School and began professional life as a lawyer. He made a substantial fortune as a real estate developer - and was involved in philanthropy in New York City. He gained prominence in Woodrow Wilson's election campaign in 1912 and was rewarded with an ambassadorship to Ottoman Turkey in 1912. He remained active in politics and business after his return to the United States in 1916. His children and grandchildren include Henry Morgenthau, Jr. (Secretary of the Treasury under Franklin D. Roosevelt), Robert M. Morgenthau (District Attorney of Manhattan for 35 years), and the historian Barbara Tuchman.
